When we are young and full of ambition, we strive to make a success of our lives and business, but when the dreams of youth are fulfilled, we are not satisfied with success alone, and begin thinking of doing more for our fellow man. So it has been with me.”

- Algur H. Meadows
2018 President’s Message

To understand where we are going and prepare for the future, we must understand where we have been.

Texas Heart

On July 14, 1948, Al and Virginia Meadows created The Meadows Foundation. It was meant to be an everlasting gift of gratitude to Texas.

We are often asked why Texas. After all, it was really Al and Virginia’s adopted home state.

Algur H. Meadows was born in Vidalia, Georgia, in 1899. Virginia Stuart Garrison was born in Ryan, Oklahoma, in 1902 and spent most of her youth in Shreveport, Louisiana. After moving around the south, Al also settled in Shreveport where they met. They married in 1922. Al worked for Standard Oil by day and studied law at night.

Al left Standard Oil to start up his own oil and gas finance firm and later founded a production company. He and Virginia moved to Dallas in 1936. He eventually built General American Oil Company into one of the largest independent producers in the nation.

While they gave to causes in Louisiana, Georgia, and other national and international locations, Al and Virginia chose Texas to receive the majority of their wealth because they believed the state and its people had been so generous to them.

Quiet Beginnings

The Foundation’s first grants were modest - $1,000 to Hope Cottage and $500 to the Pilot Institute for the Deaf (now Gallaudet Center for Communication Disorders). Giving grew steadily over the years to include many of the state’s most recognizable nonprofits and institutions: Texas Health Resources, Communities Foundation of Texas, UT Southwestern, YWCA, United Way, Dallas Museum of Art, and Children’s Medical Center.

When Al Meadows died in 1978, the Foundation had made grants totaling more than $35 million. The most notable of which were to Southern Methodist University to establish the Meadows Museum in memory of Virginia, who had passed away in 1961, and to endow the School of the Arts.

Family Key

Al and Virginia were devoted to their family. Instead of leaving them a monetary fortune, they gave them the blessing and responsibility of governing the Foundation’s work.

Responsibility for managing the Foundation has been passed down from generation to generation. Every qualified member of the first, second, and third generations has accepted the responsibility to serve. Soon, the fourth generation will have the opportunity to participate as well.

I am incredibly proud of how thoughtful and dedicated each family member has been to our mission, to our work, and to Texas. Over the last 43 years, first as a board member and then as president, I have watched them ask hard questions, put the Foundation’s interests above personal points of view, and make difficult choices about where to direct funding. We have learned how to work together because we realize it is the people impacted by our grantmaking who are our priority. It’s a tremendous privilege and responsibility that each one of us takes seriously.
70 YEARS

If their giving had ended in 1978, Al and Virginia Meadows would be astounded at how the organizations they invested in have flourished. Many continue to operate and in much larger capacities beyond Dallas.

But they saw the possibility of impacting others for generations to come. They also knew the issues facing our state and communities would change over time, and they trusted their family to find ways to continually improve the quality of life in Texas. This has allowed the Foundation to have great flexibility to adapt as society changes.

It can also be daunting.

When my cousin Curtis Meadows Jr. became president of the Foundation in 1978, he worked incredibly hard to align Al and Virginia’s vision with the new reality without them to guide the work. He and my cousin Sally Rhodus Lancaster catalogued every gift the Foundation had given in the previous 30 years and those Al and Virginia had given personally. Most of them fell into the broad categories of arts and culture, civic and public affairs, education, health, and human services. With the family’s concurrence, these became our primary areas of giving.

Curtis also shepherded the Foundation through enormous growth in our assets after the sale of General American Oil Company and embraced Uncle Al’s creativity, innovation, and entrepreneurship to establish our largest, most significant program-related investment – the Wilson Historic District. He also assembled a staff of talented individuals to carry out the work, several of whom are still with us.

When I became president and CEO 23 years ago, current and potential board members came together to look toward the future and identify significant issues facing Texas. We became more strategic in our grantmaking. We determined public education, mental health, and the environment were initiatives on which the Foundation could make progress.

While these initiatives have focused our giving, the biggest effect has been on our approach. Collaboration with public and private partners is more important than ever to move the needle on our most systemic and ingrained challenges. It helps us understand the landscape and focus on strategic alignment of goals and resources for greater impact. We also use technology in innovative ways to understand what can drive problems and what can solve them.

I am particularly proud that we were able to establish acclaimed institutions with the development of The Meadows Mental Health Policy Institute, The Meadows Center for Water and the Environment at Texas State University in San Marcos, and The Meadows Center for Preventing Educational Risk at The University of Texas at Austin, all of which have had a tremendous impact on their principal issues.

The Foundation has been honored to support the real heroes of Texas. Thousands of dedicated workers and volunteers have taken the funds the Foundation provided and used them to address the problems of our times. They have made the Foundation’s work successful. We are grateful to all of them.

- CURTIS W. MEADOWS JR., FORMER FOUNDATION PRESIDENT & DIRECTOR
Southern Methodist University has been successful beyond Al’s original vision. The Meadows Museum and the Meadows School of the Arts at SMU are now widely considered among the best in the nation and the world. The museum has realized his desire to create a respected institution of Spanish art in the southwestern United States, in the same spirit as the Prado Museum in Madrid. It now holds the largest and most important collection of Spanish art outside of Spain. The school is now recognized as one of the best in the country and competes with other top arts-education institutions, attracting talented students and highly accomplished faculty from across the country and internationally.

The Wilson Historic District is a widely used model of adaptive reuse and community revitalization. In 1981, this area of Dallas was unsafe, and many of the 19th-century Victorian homes were dilapidated, burned-out, or otherwise uninhabitable. The Foundation took a chance on creating a nonprofit neighborhood, the first of its kind in the country, and strengthening the entire area so it could flourish. More than 150 agencies have benefitted from free rent to build operational strength and collaboration with each other to build efficiency.

With community and statewide support, we seized the opportunity to work on changing the conversation on mental health in Texas. In only five years, The Meadows Mental Health Policy Institute has become a go-to resource for impartial and objective research for policymakers. As a nonpartisan, nonpolitical institute, it has enormous potential to change so many lives. The Institute has had extraordinary and historic success in helping our legislators create a better mental-healthcare system.

THE NEXT CHAPTER

Many of the issues Al and Virginia’s generation faced have not vanished, and new problems constantly emerge. Most challenges are complicated, thorny, and easy to push aside in the hope someone else will take them on. We cannot view them with wariness. We must see them as opportunities for true change and keep taking one step at a time.

As I retire as president and CEO of the Foundation at the end of 2019, I look forward to supporting my cousin Peter Miller as he accepts this most important challenge. I know under his leadership, the Foundation will continue to grow, thrive, and stand ready to address the issues facing Texas. It has been the greatest honor of my life to have been chosen by my family to lead the Foundation for the last 23 years. When I first became president and CEO in 1996, it was overwhelming because Al and Curtis Meadows left big shoes to fill. Building on the strong foundation they created, I have been fortunate to be helped along the way by many philanthropic, nonprofit, and civic leaders from whom I’ve learned so much – extend my deepest appreciation to them, the Meadows family, and the people we serve.

For the staff of The Meadows Foundation, there are no words to adequately express my gratitude. Their loyalty and commitment to our mission has made it a joy to walk through the door every day. I thank them for being part of this extraordinary journey with me!

With overwhelming gratitude,

Linda Perryman Evans
President and CEO

“Glory is light, light gives joy, and joy is the happiness of the spirit.”

- ANTONI GAUDI
MISSION
The Meadows Foundation exists to assist people and institutions of Texas improve the quality and circumstances of life for themselves and future generations.

VISION
The Meadows Foundation strives to exemplify the principles of its founder in addressing basic human needs by working toward the elimination of ignorance, hopelessness and suffering; protecting the environment; providing cultural enrichment; encouraging excellence; and promoting understanding and cooperation among people.

“Al wanted to give back to this community something for that which it had given him. He made gifts to any number of charitable enterprises and, for this, he and his wife, Virginia, dedicated their estate to the good of Texas and mankind.”

- WADDY BULLION, FORMER DIRECTOR AND TRUSTEE OF THE MEADOWS FOUNDATION

Foundation Established July 14th
The Pilot Institute was founded in 1943 to help deaf children learn to communicate through speech and lip reading. The institute later became the Callier Center for Communication Disorders at The University of Texas at Dallas. Callier Center is now nationally recognized for its research, education, and clinical care that helps children and adults with hearing, speech, and language disorders communicate and connect with others. With services ranging from hearing and balance services to speech and language therapy, Callier reaches 4,000 patients each year.

Emma Wylie Ballard opened Baby Cottage in 1918 to care for abandoned babies in Dallas. Renamed Hope Cottage in 1920, the agency has evolved from providing baby care and maternity homes to offering counseling for pregnant women and their families, pre- and post-adoption services, and adoption awareness and parenting education. By its centennial in 2018, Hope Cottage had helped more than 30,000 women and placed more than 16,000 infants and children in safe, caring homes. It is the oldest nonprofit, non-faith-based agency in the area and has expanded its programs to El Paso and Tyler.

The Meadows Foundation has awarded $514,500 to Callier Center and $828,925 to Hope Cottage over the last 70 years.

First Grants

The Foundation’s first gifts were modest. The Pilot Institute for the Deaf received $500 and Hope Cottage received $1,000. Both organizations have grown in size and scope to serve more Texans.
Southwestern Diabetic Foundation opened Camp Sweeney in 1950 for children with type I diabetes. The summer camp offers kids a chance to build their confidence and learn how to independently manage their diabetes so it does not control their lives. The Foundation’s relationship with Camp Sweeney started with $500 annual gifts. Through grants totaling $861,000, Camp Sweeney has enhanced its recreational, multipurpose, and medical facilities as well as improved its dormitories. The camp has served more than 30,000 children from 40 states and 10 countries.

Baylor College of Dentistry-Texas A&M University System Health Science Center received a $1,500 gift. Since then, every public and private health-education institution in Texas has received funding from The Meadows Foundation. By 2018, grants totaled $14.5 million.
In 1914, the first community foundation was established in the United States as a way for people to address their local community’s current and future needs. It also changed who could give because it was open to members regardless of wealth, race, gender, and other societal divisions.

In Texas, there are 32 community foundations, including Communities Foundation of Texas. The organization was established in 1953 as the Dallas Community Chest Trust Fund. Its first gifts came from Al Meadows and The Meadows Foundation for $10,000. Its assets now total over $1.1 billion in more than 1,000 charitable funds. In 2018, it awarded $106 million in grants.

The Meadows Foundation has given more than $17 million to community foundations across Texas.

Life Blood

Wadley Research Institute was created in 1951 to find a cure for leukemia and cancer, then evolved into one of the nation’s first blood banks, which was later called BloodCare. In 1998, it joined with Carter Blood Center, Fort Worth’s area blood bank, to become Carter BloodCare.

The Meadows Foundation has granted Carter BloodCare $3 million, including its early investments in Wadley. The first grant was $2,300 for leukemia research in 1958, and the most recent gift was $250,000 toward a new facility to expand services in North Central Texas in 2005.

Today, Carter BloodCare provides life-saving transfusion resources to almost 200 medical facilities in over 50 counties throughout North, Central, and East Texas. Each year, it provides more than 400,000 units of blood products to meet patients’ treatment requirements.

The First Decade

$83,086 given to 36 charitable organizations through 83 grants.
Al Meadows donated the land for Presbyterian Hospital of Dallas in 1962 in Virginia’s memory. In addition, he co-chaired a $4 million fundraising effort to build the facility. The campaign exceeded its goals and raised $4.5 million, then the single largest fund ever raised in Dallas. The hospital opened May 6, 1966, with six floors, 400 beds, 200 physicians, and 175 employees. The hospital, now known as Texas Health Presbyterian Hospital of Dallas, is part of Texas Health Resources, one of the largest faith-based, nonprofit health systems in the country and serves all North Texas counties through hospitals, outpatient facilities, and community clinics.

Virginia Meadows passed away December 10, 1961.
Historically Black Colleges and Universities

There have been 12 historically black colleges and universities in Texas, the first being Paul Quinn College in 1872. Texas is now home to nine HBCUs, including three of the largest in the nation - St. Philip’s College, Texas Southern University, and Prairie View A&M. Since 1962, the Foundation has awarded grants to every HBCU in Texas totaling $3.6 million.

Bishop College was founded in East Texas in 1881 and developed a renowned ministry-education program. The college moved to Dallas in 1961 with help from the Hoblitzelle Foundation and expanded its liberal arts college programming. The Meadows Foundation awarded the school $638,500 for operations, building dormitories, and establishing the African American Museum in Dallas.

After Bishop College closed in 1988, Paul Quinn College purchased the campus and moved from Waco in 1990. Paul Quinn is the oldest Texas HBCU and the only one in North Texas. It is also the nation’s first urban work college. Affiliated with the African Methodist Episcopal Church, the school has actively transformed itself into one of the country’s great small colleges with unique programs such as the African-American Leadership Institute and an organic produce farm where the football field used to be. The Meadows Foundation has granted Paul Quinn almost $1.3 million since 1994 toward a conversation-changing model of higher education.

Legacy of Bishop College

The African American Museum was founded as part of Bishop College’s Special Collections in 1974. The museum later moved to Fair Park. It is the only museum in the southwestern U.S. devoted to preserving and displaying African American artistic, cultural, and historical materials and has one of the largest African-American folk-art collections in the country. The Meadows Foundation has supported the museum through $1 million in grants and program-related investments.
During the 1950s on business trips to Madrid, Al Meadows spent his free time at the Prado Museum. The museum inspired his interest in Spanish art, which he began acquiring, and sparked his desire to create “a small Prado for Texas.”

Al donated his entire Spanish art collection, worth almost $3 million, to Southern Methodist University as a memorial to his wife, Virginia. He also provided an endowment of $1 million to the Fine Arts Center to house the Virginia Meadows Art Museum.

Virginia was a music student and, like Al, a supporter of fine arts. She graduated from Kidd-Key College in Sherman, Texas, which was affiliated with the North Texas Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church. After it closed in 1933, its graduates were recognized as alumni by the SMU Alumni Association.
APRIL 3, 1965

The Virginia Meadows Museum was dedicated at SMU. It included the Elizabeth Meadows Sculpture Court and Garden in honor of Al Meadows’ second wife.

1968

Al gifted the university 77 acres of land in Dallas to sell for an endowment gift. The school received $12 million from the sale.

1969

The Foundation provided an additional $8 million endowment to the School of the Arts. In appreciation of Al and the Foundation’s generosity, SMU renamed the school as the Meadows School of the Arts.

1977

The Foundation added $10 million to the Meadows School of the Arts’ endowment.

1981

As a memorial to Al, SMU and the Foundation established the A.H. Meadows Award for Excellence in the Arts to recognize the highest level of international achievement in the creative and performing arts. The award was discontinued until 2005. Recipients included Ingmar Bergman, Martha Graham, Arthur Miller, Edward Albee, Wynton Marsalis, and Angela Lansbury.

“I consider this gift to be an investment in education and the arts for Dallas and the Southwest. It is my conviction that this university and this school must have substantial financial bases if they are able to bring superior educational and cultural opportunities to our people.”

The Meadows Museum celebrated its 50th anniversary. In recognition of this milestone, the Foundation gave its single largest gift of $45 million to sustain both the museum and the art school’s standards of excellence. It also brought two of Spain’s most important private collections to Dallas, the Abelló and House of Alba art collections, and drew visitors from around the world.

By the end of 2018, The Meadows Foundation’s total giving to Southern Methodist University was almost $148 million. The school’s achievements have met and surpassed Al Meadows’ vision in 1962.

The Meadows Museum houses the largest collection of Spanish art outside of Spain. Al’s idea of creating a modest Prado on the Prairie has grown into an internationally esteemed institution.

The Meadows School is a national model for arts education in the 21st century. It attracts some of the best and brightest students and faculty from across the country and internationally. It has also grown its traditional programs while cultivating new ones such as creative computation, international arts management, and one that would especially thrill Al, arts entrepreneurship.

In celebration of the Foundation’s 50th anniversary, $20 million was granted to SMU to build a new Meadows Museum. It opened in 2001 with an 11-day festival, culminating with an official visit from Their Royal Majesties King Juan Carlos I and Queen Sofia of Spain and Texas Governor Rick Perry.

The Meadows Foundation committed $33 million to the growth and enhancement of the exciting art collection at the Meadows Museum and to advance student and faculty recruitment and retention at the Meadows School of the Arts.

The Meadows Prize was inaugurated in 2009 and is presented to pioneering artists, scholars, or projects in an academic area offered within the Meadows School of the Arts. Recipients include Grammy-winning Eighth Blackbird, playwright and performer Will Power, choreographer Shen Wei, and arts and culture investor CultureBank.

Changing Visions

Beginning in 1970, the Foundation has invested $2.7 million to give children and adults with visual impairments new opportunities through research and clinical screening services, education programs, and employment services. Organizations that serve San Antonio, El Paso, the Rio Grande Valley, and North Texas have received funding in addition to programs intended for statewide access such as guide dogs for military veterans and creating audio-book libraries.

Art for All

At Meadows was a trustee of the Dallas Museum of Art (DMA) for many years. From 1961 until 1972, the gave small gifts of annual support and several larger donations of artwork to the museum. In its first major gift to the DMA, the Foundation helped purchase a pre-Columbian collection in 1973 with a $350,000 gift. After Al passed away, the Foundation awarded the museum $2 million for capital funds to purchase land and construct a new museum, and donated 38 paintings and sculptures from Mr. and Mrs. Meadows’ collection. Twenty-six artists were represented in the historic gift, including Claude Monet, Berthe Morisot, and Camille Pissarro. The collection was formed over many years as a personal pursuit and as a complement to the Spanish artworks at the core of the Meadows Museum.

Since 1961, the Dallas Museum of Art has received $15.3 million from the Foundation for artwork acquisitions and exhibitions, endowments, education programs, infrastructure, and capital campaigns as well as helping the museum provide meaningful art experiences by offering free admission to the public.

In The Meadows Foundation charter, Al and Virginia specified that members of the Meadows family should carry out their vision and govern the organization’s operations for as long as possible. Al and Virginia’s nephew Curtis W. Meadows Jr. was elected to be president and CEO after Al’s death. Curtis is a second-generation Meadows family member. He left his position as a managing partner of a Dallas law firm to oversee the Foundation’s transition.

The Foundation took the leading role in establishing the Center for Nonprofit Management to provide nonprofits with organizational, operating, marketing, and fundraising assistance. Happy with the center’s success, the Foundation funded programs to replicate the model to sites across the state in 1987. Altogether, $8.4 million has been invested in strengthening nonprofit operations through these centers.

After its founding in 1948, the Foundation was located within the General American Oil Company. For many years, it had only one part-time employee. After Al Meadows’ death, the Foundation experienced significant growth with the acquisition of his assets, and it was necessary to find a new, larger home. During this time, the Foundation was offered an opportunity to acquire a historically important area of Dallas that was rundown and unsafe. It featured the Wilson house and a small cluster of turn-of-the-century Victorian homes that were largely abandoned, vandalized, burned-out, and uninhabitable. The Foundation and its board of directors took the chance to not only preserve some of the last remaining Victorian homes in Dallas and stabilize a distressed area of the city, but to also find a new home for its operations and the nation’s first nonprofit neighborhood.

Wilson Historic District

The District: From the Wilson House to St. James AME Church

The District gets its name from the builders of the Wilson Block – Frederick and Henrietta Wilson. The Wilsons bought one city block from Henrietta’s uncle to build a new home for their young family. The stately Queen Anne style home on the corner of Swiss Avenue and Oak Street became the anchor of the block. The Wilsons built six additional homes on the block to rent because they wanted to be able to choose their neighbors. Most of these homes still remain as do the Wilsons’ carriage house and servants’ quarters.

Members of the Wilson family lived in the home for more than 75 years. In 1977, their son Laurence sold it because of his failing health and the rapidly deteriorating condition of the home. When the Foundation later acquired it in 1981 as part of its initial work in the neighborhood, it was the first structure renovated and became the Foundation’s home. (The Foundation moved to its current location in 1992, and Preservation Dallas now occupies the Wilson House.)

One of the last structures added to the District was the St. James African Methodist Episcopal Church in 1998. It is a Neoclassical building designed by William Sydney Pittman, a prominent African-American architect and son-in-law of Booker T. Washington. The church was funded by church members and built entirely by African-American contractors. It opened January 9, 1921, and housed the St. James congregation for 64 years.

The Wilson Historic District offers nonprofit residents free office space to help them develop financial stability and increase their service capacity, improve their management effectiveness and efficiency, and work collaboratively with other neighborhood agencies. Over 150 nonprofit agencies have received space worth $47.4 million.

The District encompasses 23 acres and includes 14 turn-of-the-century homes, two carriage houses, the historic St. James African Methodist Episcopal Church, a conference center, and several other tenant buildings. It is among fewer than 150 historically designated landmark structures and districts by the City of Dallas, and the District’s Wilson Block is listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

What began as a small project is one of Dallas’ largest historic-preservation projects and has been a catalyst for redevelopment in the surrounding neighborhood and a national model of nonprofit communities.
The Charitable Schools Program was initiated to encourage and support community volunteerism by middle and high school students. Each participating school received a small cash award to plan and implement service projects. With help and direction from teachers, students gave back to their local area through service projects meant to promote volunteerism, increase their knowledge of their communities, foster interaction with their beneficiaries, and develop leadership skills.

With adoption of community service as a graduation requirement for most public and private schools, the program concluded in 2017 having awarded $4.2 million.

“[Al Meadows] would want you to be a good citizen, to love others as much as you love yourself, to help others in need, and to try to leave the world a little better place when your life is over than it was when you started out.”

- ELOISE MEADOWS ROUSE, FORMER FOUNDATION VICE PRESIDENT, DIRECTOR, AND CHARITABLE SCHOOLS PROGRAM COORDINATOR

Charitable Schools Program

After Al Meadows’ death, the remainder of his personal art and sculpture collection was left to the Foundation, which started a program to gift the 111 pieces to organizations across Texas. Institutions were invited to view and request works that would enhance their facilities. The collection was given to 16 groups for spaces such as museums, flower gardens, public buildings, colleges, a historic fort, and a former jail.

Al’s collection now belongs to the people of diverse communities, including Beeville, Albany, McAllen, Wichita Falls, Denton, Odessa, Beaumont, San Angelo, and Huntsville.

Texas A&M University-Commerce began the Meadows Principal Improvement Program with a $234,400 grant. The grant is part of the Foundation’s investment in principals, superintendents, school-board trustees, and other education administrators to ensure they receive quality professional development to improve academic outcomes.

A devastating freeze on Christmas Eve 1983 destroyed more than half of the 8.1 million citrus trees in the Rio Grande Valley at the southernmost tip of Texas. In 1984, the loss resulted in the elimination of more than 6,000 agricultural jobs in the region. In response to the disaster, the Foundation awarded $152,300 to researchers at Texas A&M–Kingsville Citrus Center. They were developing a sweeter, redder, more freeze-resistant grapefruit with the potential to restore jobs and revitalize the industry. By 1987, the first commercial crops of the new Rio Star variety were harvested. Today, there are several new varieties of South Texas grapefruits as a result of the Rio Star.
In 1977, a judge in Seattle began using community volunteers to be a voice for abused and neglected children in court. Court Appointed Special Advocates (CASA) provided information Judge David W. Soukup needed to safeguard the best interest of children. The idea spread to Texas in 1980. In 1988, the Foundation made a $50,000 grant to establish Texas CASA to serve as a statewide collaboration of CASA organizations. Through CASA and other agencies dedicated to helping abused and neglected children, the Foundation has awarded $11 million to child-advocacy efforts in every corner of the state.

Dotted along 200 miles of the Texas-Mexico border between Laredo and Brownsville are homes, churches, and other historic buildings and sites that date back as far as 200-250 years ago. The area was used by nomadic tribes, early explorers, and U.S. and Mexican militaries.

The Foundation granted $3.85 million to restore many of these sites as part of Los Caminos del Rio Heritage Project. Meant to be a tool for economic development and historic preservation along the Rio Grande River, the project included public and private funds from both sides of the border to help restore significant landmarks, including the Hidalgo Pumphouse Museum, Roma’s historic plaza, La Borde House in Rio Grande City, the Palo Alto Battlefield, Laredo’s Republic of the Rio Grande Museum, Port Isabel Lighthouse, and the cathedral at Guadalupe Viaro. The project raised awareness of the importance of the area to Texan-generated tourism, and stimulated the region’s economy.

Additionally, the Foundation supported efforts to improve the quality of life for residents of the surrounding colonias. Colonias are unincorporated communities without basic services and infrastructure such as drinking water, electricity, or paved roads. Work included development of environmentally sensitive homes, implementation of self-help models to address water and wastewater problems, delivery of health and human services, and establishment of community banks to assist local residents in creating microenterprise businesses.

Eighteen of 21 Feeding Texas partner food banks and many community banks and pantries have received a total of $8.3 million in grants, including South Plains Food Bank in Lubbock.

With a gift of $1.25 million in 1993, South Plains created a nonprofit food-processing agency, Breedlove Foods, to dehydrate fruits and vegetables that would otherwise be thrown out or left to rot in fields. The project brought shelf-stable, nutritious food to the region and across the state for 25 years. Although the dehydration program ended, Breedlove’s other operations help feed adults and children vulnerable to hunger in Texas, the United States, and 65 other countries.
Realizing that some issues are so complex and urgent that they require concentrated attention and investment to move the needle, the Foundation designated three high-priority initiatives:

1. The Environment
2. Public Education
3. And Mental Health

Proactive Grantmaking

Rural communities sustain most of Texas’ need for energy, food, and natural resources. However, they are challenged by a lack of access to healthcare and transportation, low wages, and fewer job opportunities. The Foundation has provided more than $32.6 million in grants for these specific needs, including $220,191 in 2000 to support housing and economic development, micro-loan programs, adult literacy and GED education, and arts and culture opportunities.

Five Decades

1997

1998

2000

Linda Perryman Evans was elected president and CEO of the Foundation. She served on the board since 1986. She is a third-generation Meadows family member and the great-niece of Al and Virginia. Prior to her role at the Foundation, Linda was a partner in a public relations firm.
The environment is a vast, interconnected system critical to the lives of humans, wildlife, and habitats. The Foundation’s strategic environmental plan supports programs and initiatives to promote and improve water quality and quantity, land and habitat conservation, sustainable energy, and environmental awareness.

As part of this initiative, the Foundation has funded $43.8 million in environmental programs since 1997, including the creation of The Meadows Center for Water and the Environment at Texas State University in 2002. The center addresses critical water issues in the state with unbiased scientific research, education, and stewardship programs. It is the only organization dedicated solely to understanding and addressing Texas water supplies.

Its work to protect the state’s 191,000 miles of rivers and streams has been recognized locally and statewide. It has become one of the leading water-systems institutions in the nation and is fostering the next generation of environmental leaders at local, academic, and research, and policymaking levels.

All plants and animals are dependent on water, more so than any other substance, and we have the capacity to exhaust our supplies. As we plan our water use, we must leave enough in the system for the environment because human use is only one part of the equation. Without water flowing down our rivers and streams and into our basins and aquifers, our ecosystem will collapse.”

- ANDREW SANSOM, PH.D., FOUNDING DIRECTOR OF THE MEADOWS CENTER FOR WATER & THE ENVIRONMENT
Emergency services are vital to rural areas, and the Foundation has awarded $3.4 million for new vehicle and air ambulances, medical and communication equipment, and nonemergency medical transportation vehicles.

In 2005, the Sweeny Hospital District EMS covered a 1,200-square-mile area of mostly rural Sweeney and West Brazos. None of the area’s three hospitals offered surgical specialties, and emergencies required patients to be transported to Houston 60 miles away. Of its four mobile emergency-service units, only one was in optimal condition. The foundation awarded Sweeney EMS $50,000 toward purchasing two new ambulances to maintain a high level of care.
The Meadows Center for Preventing Educational Risk at The University of Texas at Austin was created with the help of the Foundation as a research and training institute for educators and school leaders to help at-risk kids be academically successful and reduce their chances of dropping out of school.

The Foundation has granted a total of $8.9 million to the center and its partners, including Research in Mathematics at SMU and Middle School Matters at the George W. Bush Institute, as part of its public-education initiative.

Research in Mathematics is developing and implementing research on effective math instruction in teacher training and classroom materials. Middle School Matters aims to increase the number of students well prepared for high school and postsecondary education through research-based practices shown to help middle school students.

These three programs have become go-to sources for nonpartisan, empirically validated, and evidence-based research and practices.

The Meadows Center for Preventing Educational Risk

The Meadows Foundation

Teaching can change their students’ lifelong opportunities with high-quality instruction and engagement. As part of the Foundation’s public-education initiative, $37.2 million has been invested in teacher preparation, retention, and professional development programs such as Teach for America.

TFA recruits top recent college graduates to teach for two years in high-need, low-income public schools around the U.S. The Foundation awarded TFA $430,000 in 1995 to support the Rio Grande Valley program and $600,000 in 2008 to launch the Dallas-Fort Worth program. At the end of 2018, Foundation grants totaled $4.4 million to the organization.

By December 31, 2018, $69 million has been awarded to agencies and programs aligned with the Foundation’s public-education initiative.
Affordable housing is a key component of economic self-sufficiency. Developers and organizations who would like to build housing for low-income and very poor communities are often unable to because loans needed are considered too risky for a traditional lender. The Foundation is able to use program-related investments (PRIs) to offer a funding source for these types of projects in the form of funds or loans that will be fully or partially repaid.

In 2010, $1.4 million in loan funds were given toward affordable housing in rural areas of the state, neighborhoods with high foreclosure rates, and for chronically homeless adults with mental health issues.

In addition to housing, the Foundation has invested $17 million in program-related investments for the Wilson Historic District and other large projects such as construction of the African American Museum at Fair Park in Dallas, purchase of 33,000 acres of bottomland hardwoods along the Neches River in Tyler and Polk counties, and a substance abuse and mental health treatment center for parolees and probationers in the Panhandle.

Understanding the importance of the human-animal connection, the board adopted animal welfare as an area of special interest to protect the safety and well-being of companion and other domestic animals. The Foundation has awarded $5.5 million to reduce overpopulation of dogs and cats, create more no-kill cities, promote and strengthen the collective impact of animal-focused nonprofits, and foster the human-animal connection. Organizations such as Austin Pets Alive! have used funding to transform systemic issues using new and creative solutions.

In 2008, crime and recidivism reduction were also recognized by the board as a special area of interest. Most of the education and human-services grants given by the Foundation influence primary and secondary types of crime prevention such as parent education, childcare for low-income families, mental health and substance abuse treatment, job training, and affordable housing. More-targeted grants focus on preventing recidivism once a person has committed a crime. These fund educational programs in prisons and jails, and employment services and transitional housing for formerly incarcerated individuals. All told, $5.3 million has been given toward these efforts.
Those who suffer from mental health issues do not do so by choice. They can and deserve to live productive and successful lives with needed treatment and support.

Through its strategic initiative on mental health, the Foundation has funded $77.6 million in programs to address access to effective care, increase the size of the mental health workforce, and promote excellence in research and policy recommendations.

By far, the largest investment was establishing The Meadows Mental Health Policy Institute. The institute works with Texas legislators, state officials, members of the judiciary, and local leaders to identify systemic mental health issues and workable solutions, and has established itself as Texas’ most trusted source for data-driven mental health policy.

In only five years and across three sessions of the Texas Legislature, the institute has made a significant impact in multiple priority areas, including helping Texas leaders improve access to care for veterans and their families, shifting the focus of new investments toward early intervention strategies, and helping address the mental health crisis in local jails and emergency rooms.

Since the institute’s founding, baseline spending on mental health in Texas has increased by more than $1.75 billion.

The Institute’s award-winning program, Okay to Say, is spreading a simple message: mental illness is treatable. All Texans deserve access to effective mental health care, and it’s okay to talk openly about mental health.

The stigma of mental illness has silenced progress for far too long. Mental health services must be available to people when and where they need them.
Texas is first in the nation for the variety and frequency of natural disasters. At least one disaster is declared in the state each year for events such as flooding, wildfires, tornadoes, droughts, hail storms, and hurricanes. Beginning in 1970 with Hurricane Celia, $14.3 million in grants has been given to support communities in the aftermath of these catastrophes, including $4.6 for hurricanes Katrina and Rita and $2.25 million for Hurricane Harvey.

1999:
Extremes Texas heat creates health emergencies for many seniors and medically fragile Dallas residents who do not have air conditioning or fans in their homes. Working with the Dallas County Health and Human Services and the Dallas County Sheriff’s Department, The Meadows Foundation together with other local foundations have given $844,000 to purchase and distribute 4,750 air-conditioning units to residents in need.

2005:
In 2005, $4 million was granted to help Katrina evacuees coming to Texas from Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama. Subsequently, another $600,000 was given to assist Texans affected by Hurricane Rita. Assistance ranged from emergency shelter and mental health services to permanent housing and micro-business loans.

2017:
After Hurricane Harvey, grants were given to support trauma-informed mental health programs for youth, temporary housing, economic assistance for small businesses, legal aid, reconstruction and development of destroyed schools and homes, and emergency operating support for nonprofits.

Natural Disasters

Disaster-Relief Funding

Across Seven Decades
$1,229,055,900 given in gifts to charitable organizations since 1948. That is 8,334 grants given to 3,607 agencies impacting all 254 Texas counties.

I’m sure my mother would be very proud of these different projects and the scope, the dedication of the people, the quality of the people we have working here, and the reputation that the foundation has in this community and throughout the state of Texas.”

- ROBERT A. MEADOWS, AL AND VIRGINIA MEADOWS’ SON
VICE PRESIDENT AND CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

Notes:
- The table above outlines the projects and contributions for the Human Services category, focusing on programs related to early childhood education and support for at-risk infants.
- Contributions range from $50,000 to $100,000, with a total of $2,609,100 allocated.
- The Meadows Foundation is a significant contributor to these efforts, with a cumulative impact of $15,787,700 across various programs.
- The overall contribution totals $18,184,200, contributing to the broader mission of supporting vulnerable populations.

Additional Notes:
- The data reflects a targeted approach to support early childhood education and comprehensive care for at-risk infants and families.
- The projects aim to enhance access to essential services, ensuring a safe and nurturing environment for all children.
- Collaboration with various partners, including local governments and non-profits, underscores the collective effort to address critical needs.

Conclusion:
- The Human Services category is pivotal in addressing the foundational needs of infants and their families, ensuring a strong start in life.
- Contributions from The Meadows Foundation, alongside other stakeholders, demonstrate a commitment to fostering resilience and opportunity for all.
- The data highlights the importance of sustained investment in early childhood development and support services, vital for long-term community well-being.

When Al and Virginia Meadows established The Meadows Foundation, they appointed Al’s brother and five sisters to serve as trustees. They relied on their family’s dedication to the Foundation’s objectives, and entrusted them to pass it on to their descendants.

It was Al and Virginia’s wish that the Foundation exist forever under the care of each successive generation. Descendants within each of the seven family branches, whenever possible, accept the responsibility to serve based on willingness, ability, and dedication to the Foundation’s mission.

Over the last 70 years, the Foundation has been guided by the first, second, and third generations of Meadows family members. Together with trusted outside directors, they have carried out the legacy Al and Virginia Meadows created to serve the state of Texas now and for future generations.

Al and Virginia Meadows believed all Texans deserve the same gift they were afforded – the opportunity to live happy, healthy, and productive lives. At the heart of their philanthropy was a commitment to be a perpetual resource for good in Texas, so when today’s problems evolve and take new forms tomorrow, The Meadows Foundation will still be here to help.
